Q: How can I fix this jquery "auto load" problem? I am using jQuery auto-load and my problem is it is slow. I have a custom load function function loadPage(url, callback) { $('#content').html(''); $.get(url, function (data) { $('#content').html(data); callback(); }); } } I call it like this: loadPage('/', function() { alert("loaded"); $(".div#swipe").swipe('start'); $(".tweet-container").textContent = "hello"; }); I have a website where I need to load a page and then in a few seconds access some data from the db and update the content. To minimize load times. I will use ajax and call my database instead of the server. I am thinking of doing the following... function loadPage(url, callback) { $('#content').html(''); $.get(url, function (data) { $('#content').html(data); callback(); }); } $(function () { loadPage('/ajax/test.js', function() { $(".div#swipe").swipe('start'); $(".tweet-container").textContent = "hello"; }); }); I am trying to test this and I am concerned about the performance. A: Since you are calling Ajax in another function and you are keeping the element in the DOM (which means there is DOM traffic going on and memory consumption), you should consider calling the other function asynchronously. To do so, you need to wrap the execution of the second function inside an IIFE (Immediately Invoked Function Expression) like this: (function () {
